The song was a hit literally around the world from Ireland to the Ukraine to Taiwan. Unfortunately for the composer, Gershon Kingsley, most of bands covering the song, at home and abroad, never gave him a nickel in royalties. “Popcorn” was simply covered too much and crossed too many borders to keep track off! It has historical significance since it was one of the first examples of a successful synth pop song. Kingsley wrote it in a whopping 30 seconds, and put it on an album Music To Moog By (1969), which easily could have gone unnoticed along with so many other “Music to (fill in the blank)” albums of its ilk.. Upon its release in 1972 by Hot Butter, literally hundreds of cover versions sprouted up around the globe. The song has been used in a variety of media: several films [see Shriek of the Mutilated (1974)], the Digger video game in 1963, a Pampers commercial in 2001, etc. Kingley is in the front row (the guy with girl legs) But before we have a look at the cornucopia of cover versions - What about the song’s composer? Kingsly was born in Berlin but fled to Palestine (in an area that would later become Israel) with the rise of Nazlism and worked on a kibbutz. He taught himself piano and came to America to attend Juilliard. When he was declined, Kingsly instead graduated with a degree in music from the L.A. Conservatory of Music (shown above). It wasn’t long before Kingsley hit it big on Broadway. He was directing and was making waves as a composer for the theater, particularly the Jewish productions. But the real history begins when Kingsley starts messing around with the moog and putting together some experimental sounds. The 1966 album The In Sound from Way Out contained the typical bachelor pad hi-fi space-age weirdness. A press release from Vanguard Records: It’s electronic sound of pop music from the future. A sample of the strange new pleasure of a world which belongs to the space age. A sample of the electronic “Au Go Go” that might be heard soon from the juke boxes at the interplanetary way stations where space ships make their rest stops. Kingsley, the proud composer of a global phenomenon After Popcorn (A.P.), Madison Avenue was chomping at the bit to get Kingsley’s sounds into their commercials. Soon, he was composing sounds for everybody from Coca-Cola to Hanes stockings to Aquanet. Riding high on the subsequent success of “Popcorn”, Kingsley then began to move away from the moog. He’d made space age pop accessible to the masses, and now was moving on to greener pastures in standard classical music. Of interesting note to Flashbak readers: Kingsley composed the soundtrack for Silent Night, Bloody Night (1974) and the theme music for the game show Jokers Wild. The Joker’s Wild theme music was replaced in 1974 by an Alan Thicke composition called “Joker’s Jive”. Yes, that’s right, we just connected the dots from a 1930’s Palestinian kibbutz to the dad on Growing Pains. You can thank me later. However, this song has a way of eating at your sanity upon repeated listening. So, we’ll end here to preserve the last shreds of mental health- but, trust me, there are many, many, more. Okay, so I didn’t hear this on the radio... I heard someone humming it. I asked them, “Do you know the name of the tune you’re humming?” Their answer astounded me... “That is,” they said, “one of my favourite all-time tunes.” And, what were they humming...? Popcorn, a 1972 instrumental by Gershon Kingsley’s band, Hot Butter! gershon kingsley fax Gershon Kingsley was born in Bochum, Germany way back in 1922. Gershon went on to become a pioneer of electronic music through his discovery of the Moog synthesizer. And, believe it or not, at 91 years old, he’s still producing music today - mainly Broadway musicals and film and television scores. Oh, and commercials. He’s won two Clio Awards for his work in advertising. In the pop world, Gershon is remembered for his album, Music To Moog By which consisted mainly of Beatles, Beethoven, and Simon and Garfunkel covers, AND the famous, Popcorn. popcorn fax Popcorn was written by Gershon Kingsley in 1969, and first appeared on his album Music to Moog By. In 1972, it was re-recorded and released by Gershon’s band, Hot Butter. Hot Butter’s version was a huge hit, making it to #1 in nine countries—in France and Switzerland, it was the year’s top hit. The origin of the name is, believe it or not, a point a great discussion amongst Hot Butter fans. The track originally had no title. Someone suggested “Popcorn”, with ‘Pop’ standing for pop music and ‘corn’ for kitsch. Gershon tells a slightly different story saying, in 1969 he was listening to a popcorn machine and thought he could make a tune out of it. He spent the next day playing his Moog synthesiser looking for a catchy riff. 87 days later, it was recorded and on his Music To Moog By album Popcorn has been covered by many artists including: Jean Michel Jarre, Herb Alpert and the Tijuana Brass, Muse, James Last, Crazy Frog, Blue Man Group, and The Muppets. popcorn - hot butter - 1972 - video popcorn - crazy frog - video popcorn - techno remix - 2013 - video follow seventiesmusic on facebook.
