Cabin masters italy

The Cabin Masters are saying so long to Maine! In a PEOPLE exclusive first look at the new series, Maine Cabin Master: Building Italy (above), contractor Chase Morrill shares the happy news with his costars that he purchased a house in a remote Italian village for himself, his wife Sarah, and their four teenagers. The catch: his crew has to help him overhaul what is essentially a ruin. Luckily, the show's handy stars — including Chase's decorator sister Ashley Morrill, her husband Ryan Eldridge, and their childhood friends Matt "Dixie" Dix and Jared "Jedi" Baker — have gained plenty of experience transforming problem properties over 10 seasons. Building Italy sees them tackle new challenges — like finding tools without speaking the local language and dealing with unfamiliar materials — all with the same grit and humor that their fans have come to love. They also squeeze in some time to explore all the country has to offer with the Morrill kids, who have grown up appearing on the original series. Not unlike the stars' own hometown in central Maine, many small villages in Italy have suffered from declining populations as young people leave to find greater opportunities in urban areas. Some have even made headlines in recent years for selling unoccupied homes to foreign buyers for as little as $1 in the hopes of garnering more interest and investment in these areas. While the Morrills have not shared how they plan to use their new home, they have made an impact worth emulating in Maine. Their series' popularity has had a positive effect on he stars' small town of Manchester (about an hour north of Portland) which has become a popular tourist destination, not unlike the Gaineses' Magnolia Market at the Silos in Waco, Texas, though on a smaller scale for now, Ryan told PEOPLE in a 2022 interview, "There's restaurants popping up. It really is changing a lot and I'm proud to say we have had something to do with it." Maine Cabin Masters originally aired on the DIY Network before being saved by Chip and Joanna Gaines for their new Magnolia Network when it replaced the channel in 2022. Maine Cabin Masters: Building Italy premieres on Monday, June 17 at 9/8c on Magnolia Network with a new episode every Monday. Whether you missed the finale of Magnolia Network's six-episode spin-off, Maine Cabin Masters: Building Italy—which documents the entire buying and renovation process—or want a closer look at the final design, House Beautiful can exclusively reveal photos of the incredible transformation.Courtesy of Magnolia NetworkThe Balcony House sits on a hill with impeccable views.For their European getaway, the Morrill family purchased a property with an asking price of $97,000 in the municipality of Fossalto, which is located in Italy's mountainous region of Molise. It's roughly three hours from Rome, meaning it's also well positioned for travel. Nicknamed The Balcony House thanks to its four balconies, the five-bedroom home sits on 7.4 acres with sprawling views and an olive grove. 5 Places in Italy Where You Can Buy a Home for $1Courtesy of Magnolia NetworkExposed stonework and pale green stucco add character to the home's exterior.While structurally sound, the three-level house needed a serious overhaul to be functional. It's presumably 100 to 200 years old and was likely renovated once around the 1960s or '70s. So, Morrill, his wife, Sarah, and their four teenagers—along with MCM stars Ashley Morrill-Eldridge (Chase's sister) and her husband, Ryan Eldridge—got to work. They also relied on a team of Italian contractors and got extra help from MCM star Jared (Jedi) Baker to refresh the property within a tight three-month time line. To open up the home's hub—the kitchen—they removed a wall dividing it from the dining room and brought in gray cabinetry, yellow tile for the backsplash, and warm stone counters to complement the existing mismatched flooring. Expanding the existing bathroom on the third level, where the kids' bedrooms are, was also must for the family of six.Courtesy of Magnolia NetworkBy removing the wall between the kitchen and dining room, the team made room for a peninsula.Courtesy of Magnolia NetworkExposed stone arches enhance the home's rustic feel.To turn former animal stables on the ground level into living space, they leveled the floor using recycled concrete that they fashioned from tearing down some of the walls. That allowed them to reconfigure it into a family room with exposed stonework, an additional dining area, and a second bathroom. They even turned the old animal trough into a storage bench by reusing the room's old wooden doors as hinged lids. "All of us worked so hard on it," Eldridge says of the new ground floor. "In my opinion, it's our greatest room transformation ever."Courtesy of Magnolia NetworkThe former animal trough in the family room was turned into a storage bench.When it came time to furnish and decorate the place, the team salvaged many pieces the previous owners had left behind: beds, nightstands, dressers, kitchenware, and decor including green glass bottles. They shopped locally for new materials, like stone for the kitchen counters, and special elements for the kids' rooms, including lighting, wallpaper, and crown molding. The latter ended up being Morrill-Eldridge's favorite part of the house. "It was fun seeing each one of their personalities come through in their rooms," she says.Courtesy of Magnolia NetworkMaggie's bedroom features an amber and gold light from Luce Più.Courtesy of Magnolia NetworkThe MCM team designed a custom loft bed with a skateboard ladder and railing for Fletcher's room.Other items were built or DIYed by the team. For son Fletcher's bedroom, the team built a wooden loft bed with a skateboard ladder. Morrill-Eldridge surprised her brother and sister-in-law with hand-stamped decorative pillows for the primary bedroom that match the blue patches of pattern seen on the walls, which was discovered underneath the paint. And perhaps the most special detail in the home is the mosaic they designed to go over the working fireplace in the kitchen. It features a lemon tree with six lemons, representing each member of the family.Courtesy of Magnolia NetworkThe primary bedroom walls feature intentional patches of blue-gray pattern discovered underneath the paint.On the exterior, the team added a staircase to connect the kitchen balcony to the ground level, where they also built a deck for dining and relaxing alfresco. The balcony railings were updated, and the exterior was refreshed with new stucco in a pale green shade that complements the surrounding landscape. Throughout the house, existing stonework was exposed to amplify the home's charm. Plus, they even installed solar panels as an eco-friendly feature that also cuts costs.Courtesy of Magnolia NetworkThe deck furniture is a mix of pieces by Bizzotto, the Maury's brand Happy Garden, and L.L.Bean.As far as rewarding projects go, this one tops the list. "The blood, sweat, and tears from all of us during the renovations is only the beginning of hopefully wonderful time spent in an amazing setting," Morrill says.During the spin-off finale, Eldridge declared, "We bring a lot of places back to life, but this could be our Mona Lisa—our masterpiece."
