The White Claret Fighting Rooster, also known as Mandigin Claret Game Fowl, is one of the most renowned American-bred game fowl foundations used in modern fighting cock lines today. These intelligent birds are celebrated for their astute and accurate attacks, making them a staple bloodline within the cockfighting world. With over 90 years of history, the Claret blood can be found in numerous contemporary fighting cock lines. Widely utilized in breeding both in the US and Philippines, the Claret is considered the precursor to the well-known Lemon 84 bloodline developed by Duke Hulsey and Don Paeng Araneta. Characterized as a Straight Comb, high-stationed bird with Deep Red Color, White to Yellow legs, and Pure White birds featuring White to Yellow legs. Originally bred from a Straight Comb Wheaton Duryea hen, featuring White hackle, presented to John H. Madigin by Col. Andrew P. O'Connor, this Hen was derived from the partnership between the Hail Stone Spangle Duryea hen and her Son. A Foundation Cock used in early breeding was black, red, and white legged lemon hackled, which defeated Hanky Dean six times. The first 9 sons exhibited a Claret Wine coloration, thus earning their name. In 1917 Madigin collaborated with Dean to breed the "Black Spur" cock, originating from Mr. O'Connor's New Hope strain. The New Hopes comprised elements of Mansell Pyle, Picket, Kearney-Duryea. By 1918 Madigin further expanded this lineage by breeding a Lawman Whitehackle into the Black Spur Claret family. The Clarets have two infusions of white blood, both originating from Mansell Pyles - White Cocks from England renowned for their cutting abilities. The development of the Clarets involved numerous lines but primarily utilized Whitehackle and Pyle, predominantly yellow and white legged birds.
